

eternal conflict between ... evolution and those who fight evolution

¹ Life is struggle, conflict. That is an old truism, which means that the truth of it has ceased to have a psychological effect any longer like everything trite. The saying is not an empty phrase, however, but truth. Probably, only an esoterician can understand its real significance. Because that requires knowledge of reality, which mankind still lacks. Life is a continuous struggle between right and wrong, between good and evil, between higher and lower, between the ideology of common sense and idiotizing ideologies. Common sense is the result of that experience of life which mankind has gathered during millions of years, a very hard-earned experience the true value of which none but the esoterician can understand. Contrary to the two fundamental intellectual norms of common sense, philosophers never let this be this but must always make it something else and too easily accept any vagary as a reality idea; thus they accept things without sufficient grounds. Philosophers have always been the enemies of (page10) common sense.

²Life is struggle, for it is an eternal conflict between those who will for evolution and those who fight evolution (consciousness development)....

[...] Continue reading, scroll to 9.10 Life Is Struggle

9 THE LAW Knowledge of Life One

Translated from Swedish in the hylozoically direct style.

Original books of essays are found on the drop-down at laurency.com, top-left of page.

HylozoicExcerps