

In thousands of incarnations

¹The meaning of life and the meaning of the incarnation must be distinguished. The meaning of life is the final goal of life: the individual's actualization of his potential divinity. The meaning of the incarnation is to acquire insight and understanding, qualities and abilities by having experiences and working them up.

²Many people complain about their misspent lives. There is no such thing. We all have had experiences. Outsiders may think that many of these experiences were unnecessary. Nobody can be the judge of that. We are to have the same experiences again and again until we have learnt everything they can teach us. In thousands of incarnations we make the same blunders until we have gained the ability to learn from them.

³Many blunders, seemingly unnecessary experiences, are bad reaping. If we are idiotic and spiteful enough to condemn faults in others and so hurt them or inflict suffering on them, then these faults are forced on us. That is the incorruptible justice of life....
