

judicial bureaucracy with its cult of fictions

⁴.... The arbitrariness of the legal definitions of crimes and punishments they nowadays try to mask through international harmonization. How slow development is can be seen from the fact that Roman Law is still studied. Rational and unitary principles are lacking, being necessary bases of humane and expedient legal concepts. It is still not understood that historical traditions do not furnish any rational bases of legal norms. The judicial bureaucracy with its cult of fictions, its circumstantial and unwieldy apparatus, counteracts legal reforms. They use a pompous ceremonial trying to surround the judicial procedure with the halo of infallibility, although it is clearly recognized that no court is able to define “the truth”, but can only judge the legal case on circumstantial evidence that is often very unsatisfactory. Those who deny in principle that might is right still regard might as a condition of right. The necessity of violence in a nation shows the remoteness of the stage of culture.
